Creating Inclusive and Effective Environments for Young People:

Exploring Youth Voice and Youth-Adult Partnership

Everyone Benefits When Youth Are Consulted

An effective and evidenced-based way to improve schools, nonprofits, and government agencies is to learn from the perspective of those being served. Research has shown that giving youth a voice results in increased feelings of engagement and ownership. For example, students who believe they have a voice in school are seven times more likely to be academically motivated than students who do not believe they have a voice.¹

What Is Youth-Adult Partnership?

Gathering feedback from young people and using that feedback to improve services is a best practice for all youth-serving organizations. But that only scratches the surface. Out-of-school time programs, community-based organizations, and local government agencies can all benefit from the intentional inclusion of youth in their policies, programs, and structures.

Youth-adult partnership (Y-AP) is defined as a group of youth and adults working together to make decisions and take action on important issues.² Y-AP is not a specific program model or curriculum. Instead, it is a set of principles and practices that may be applied to a wide range of settings and activities (Figure 1). Y-AP is not just about giving young people a voice, it’s about shared decision-making. In Y-AP settings, youth are increasingly serving alongside adults as facilitators and educators, board members, researchers, media producers, community organizers, and fundraisers.

---

¹ Research has shown that giving youth a voice results in increased feelings of engagement and ownership. For example, students who believe they have a voice in school are seven times more likely to be academically motivated than students who do not believe they have a voice.

² Youth-adult partnership (Y-AP) is defined as a group of youth and adults working together to make decisions and take action on important issues.
Y-AP is a fundamental strategy for positive youth development. The use of empowering practice is a core competency for youth workers, and youth participation in decision-making is a key indicator of youth program quality. For example, it is a core feature of many assessments that measure high-quality out-of-school-time environments, such as A Program Assessment System (APAS) from the National Institute on Out-of-School Time and the Youth Program Quality Assessment (YPQA).

However, many organizations struggle to move beyond voice—occasionally asking youth for input or feedback on decisions that adults make—to a more meaningful engagement of young people in authentic decision-making, where young people work alongside adults over time to grapple with real-world issues and choices. Research suggests that youth experience higher levels of empowerment when there is this type of “shared control” among youth and adults.

Why Does Youth-Adult Partnership Matter?

A synergy happens when both youth and adults are expected to contribute their resources and perspectives toward a common goal. Through mutual learning and collective action, Y-AP has powerful influences on youth empowerment, adult development, organizational effectiveness, and community issues.

Four core principles underlie Y-AP: authentic decision-making, natural mentors, reciprocity, and community connectedness. Each principle works together to create a dynamic environment with thriving youth.

Reflecting on your program, school, or organization, consider:

- To what degree do youth have the authority to make decisions that matter to themselves and others?
- What are some settings in which youth work alongside adults who share their interests?
- How do youth and adults learn from each other?
- How do we foster a sense of belonging?
- How do we help young people feel like they have a role to play in our community?
How Can We Grow Youth-Adult Partnership Within Our Organization?

Y-AP challenges adults to think differently about their role in relationship to youth. Some adult partners adopt a mindset of “leading from behind,” which involves making space for youth to step into roles and responsibilities previously reserved for adults. Both youth and adults need support and scaffolding for this type of relationship. Effective organizations take steps to align their norms and structures to build a “culture of Y-AP” in which young people participate in multiple aspects of decision-making.

Just like adults, young people want the freedom to choose where and how they engage in decision-making. Not every young person is interested in becoming a board member. There are many ways youth and adults can share decision-making in everyday settings such as afterschool programs and classrooms. These opportunities can help lay the foundation for Y-AP in less typical settings, such as organizational operations and management.

Table 1. How Are Decisions Currently Being Made in Your Organization?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Adults control</th>
<th>Youth and adults share control</th>
<th>Youth control</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Decisions in settings where there are more youth than adults</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Establishment of group norms and expectations</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Management of conflict</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Recruitment of new program participants</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Use of space</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Program development and curriculum design</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Facilitation of program activities</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Planning of special events</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Decisions in settings where there are more adults than youth</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fundraising</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communications and outreach</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Governance and policy</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evaluation</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Staff hiring, orientation, and evaluation</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Why Should You Invest in Promoting Youth-Adult Partnership?

Y-AP is an issue of social justice. This is expressed in the saying “Nothing about us, without us.” Participation can be viewed as a basic human right that should not be denied to children because of their age. For example, Article 12 of the 1989 United Nations Convention of the Rights of the Child states that the views of children should be taken into consideration in accordance with their age and maturity. Many countries that ratified the convention have institutionalized youth participation in public institutions. In the United States, many youth organizers view equal participation as a social justice issue and make it a central part of how they operate.
Y-AP strengthens democratic society. By actively participating in group decision-making, young people develop the skills, knowledge, and dispositions they need to be active and engaged community members.\[xii, xiv\] Research suggests that Y-AP plays a role in bridging the “civic empowerment gap.”\[xv\] Participation in collective action may cultivate the agency and sociopolitical development of underrepresented youth.\[xvi\] In addition to preparing youth to lead in the future, Y-AP strengthens communities today, by promoting more responsive public policy and more inclusive community institutions.\[xvii, xviii, xix, xx\]

Y-AP is developmentally responsive practice. Youth thrive in settings that support their ability to make a difference. Like adults, they want to feel a sense of purpose, and they want to engage in activities that make a meaningful contribution to their community.\[xxi, xxii, xxiii\] Programs that provide opportunities for Y-AP may see higher retention and engagement.\[xxiv, xxv\] Quality Y-AP cultivates a sense of self-efficacy and belonging and promotes the development of skills such as strategic thinking, group process, and leadership.\[xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxix\]

Youth-Adult Partnership in Schools

A growing body of research has documented the benefits of school-based Y-AP. Schools that use a Y-AP framework have documented enhanced student-teacher relationships,\[xxx\] improved school climate,\[xxxi\] and improved instruction and curriculum.\[xxxi\] Y-AP reminds teachers, administrators, and parents that students possess unique knowledge and perspectives that can bring to light issues that may otherwise go unnoticed and often provide the most effective strategies for addressing those issues.\[xxxiii\] There are many ways in which schools can build Y-AP into their planning, including practices that focus on the classroom, school, district, or even state.

Tips for Educators and Youth Workers

1. Reflect on how youth are currently engaged with different aspects of your programming, decision-making, and operations. Are there opportunities for more youth involvement? What are they?

2. Advocate for the importance of a youth perspective. For example, push for the meaningful inclusion of youth in policymaking and governance.

3. Practice scaffolding—break down projects and actions into their component parts to help youth understand the full scope of a project and how they can effectively contribute to its success.

4. Consider how to strengthen the training, coaching, and professional development provided to your staff, so they learn to gradually take a more supporting role.

5. Examine the options available to young people. Too few options and too many options can both be problematic.

6. Hire staff members that already understand the importance of youth voice and Y-AP.

7. Realize that effective Y-AP is built upon relationships and a communal sense of belonging. How can you build strong youth-adult relationships and promote that sense of belonging?

8. Make sure you gather a broad range of youth perspectives, not just those of high-achieving or well-connected young people.
Endnotes

